Congress will probably ask s the way they mean to do it. Imthat this be done, and there is scarcely a orimis, the word has gone out from doubt that the Legislatures will comply. The question then suggests itself as to what will be the bearing of the proposed amendment upon West Virginia, Tennessee and Missouri. Of course it will strike down the iniquitous disfranchisment which has excluded from the polls a very large majority of the white men of these States. In proposing the contemplated amendment, Congress would of course go no further in the work of disfranchising than that body did in the reconstruction acts. That would not exclude from the polls five hundred white citizens of Tennessee.
